Engadin Art Talks, an annual arts and architecture symposium, must have seen a surge in ticket sales following the announcement of a star speaker on its 2019 programme: Phoebe Philo, the former Céline creative director who has famously shied away from publicity throughout her fashion career.

The festival, which will take place in the Alpine ski resort of Zuoz in the region of Engadin on January 26 and 27, is billed as a “holistic visitors’ experience”. Experts from the fields of art, design, film, architecture, science and literature will come together to discuss this year’s theme: “How do gravity and grace define current-day life in the digital age?”

Her successor, Hedi Slimane, who is hailing a new accent-less future at the brand, however, has garnered numerous column inches for his work so far. “We don’t enter a fashion house to imitate our predecessor, much less to take over the essence of their work, their codes and elements of language,” Slimane has commented when asked about filling Philo’s shoes. Philo, in turn, has remained quiet.
